Defendants The Gap, Inc., Gap (Apparel) LLC, Gap International Sales, Inc., Banana Republic, LLC, and Banana Republic (Apparel) LLC (“Gap”) respectfully submits this reply brief in support of its Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff’s Class Action Complaint pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) and 9(b).

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff’s opposition to Gap’s motion to dismiss raises no reason why Plaintiff’s claims under the California Consumer Legal Remedies Act (“CLRA”), the New Jersey Truth in Consumer Contract Warranty and Notice Act (“TWCCNA”), and the Florida Deceptive Unfair Trade and Practices Act (“FDUTPA”) should not be dismissed.

Plaintiff attempts to obfuscate the questions presently before this Court by repeating and relying on his conclusory allegations that Gap advertises false discounts at its Factory Stores. Plaintiff’s bare-bone allegations are insufficient under Rules 12(b)(6) and 9(b). Gap also raises state-specific arguments as to why Plaintiff cannot plead claims under the CLRA, the TCCWNA, and the FDUTPA.

First, Plaintiff’s CLRA claim should be dismissed because the CLRA does not apply extraterritorially. Plaintiff is a New Jersey resident who made his purchases at Banana Republic factory stores located in New Jersey and Florida. Plaintiff’s generic allegations that the allegedly wrongful pricing decisions were made in California are not enough. Moreover, even if the CLRA could be applied extraterritorially in this case, California’s choice of law analysis dictates that Plaintiff’s claims should be governed by New Jersey and/or Florida law, not California law. Plaintiff’s only response is that the choice of law analysis is premature at this stage. As set forth below, when the pleading sets forth the facts regarding a plaintiff’s residency and where the transactions took place – and both of these locales are outside of California – a choice of analysis at the pleading stage is appropriate. Notably, Plaintiff substantively does not oppose that material differences exist among the state laws at issue, and that New Jersey and Florida would be more impaired, should their laws be set aside for California law.

Second, Plaintiff’s TCCWNA claim should be dismissed because the TCCWNA does not apply to the circumstances alleged by Plaintiff and Plaintiff has not pleaded a “clearly established

1 legal right” that has been violated. Plaintiff argues that the TCCWNA is applicable because he 2 has pleaded a claim under the New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act. But, as the New Jersey Supreme 3 Court recently cautioned, courts should be wary of attempts to expand the TCCWNA’s 4 application to instances where it is unclear what “clearly established legal right” has been violated
 5 and where applying the TCCWNA would result in attaching massive civil liability to common 6 business practices in ways not contemplated by the New Jersey Legislature – precisely what 7 Plaintiff is trying to do here.

8 Third, Plaintiff’s FDUTPA claim should be dismissed because he fails to plausibly plead 9 an “actual injury,” as required by the statute. Plaintiff’s allegation that he did not receive the 10 bargain he believed he was getting, or that he would not have purchased the items at all, is 11 insufficient as a matter of law because the FDUTPA does not recognize a consumer’s subjective 12 disappointment at not receiving a promised bargain as a cognizable injury. Plaintiff’s argument 13 that his conclusory allegations are sufficient to allege an “actual injury” is unavailing — the crux 14 of his complaint is that he is subjectively disappointed to have not received what he believed was 15 a promised bargain. Notably, Plaintiff does not address Belcastro v. Burberry, Ltd., No. 16-CV-16 1080 (VEC), 2017 WL 744596 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 23, 2017), which contains the same allegations as 17 Plaintiff makes here, and which dismissed a FDUTPA claim for failing to allege an “actual 18 injury.”

19 Accordingly, because Plaintiff cannot pursue claims under the CLRA, the TCCWNA, and 20 the FDUTPA, his individual and class claims under these consumer protection statutes should be 21 dismissed.

22 II. PLAINTIFF FAILS TO PLEAD A CLAIM UNDER THE CLRA

23 Plaintiff, a New Jersey resident who made his purchases in Banana Republic factory 24 stores located in New Jersey and Florida, cannot maintain an individual or class claim under the 25 California CLRA. See Mot. at 5:10-12. As set forth in Gap’s motion, California law 26 constitutionally cannot be extended to apply to Plaintiff because he is not a California resident, 27 and he viewed and relied on the allegedly false advertising outside of California; his conclusory 28 allegations that all decisions about “policies and procedures” were made in California are

1 unsupported by any specific facts. See id. at 5:16-6:27. Even if the CLRA could be extended 2 extraterritorially in this case, California's governmental interest test concludes that New Jersey or 3 Florida law should apply to Plaintiff's claims because there are material differences among the 4 state laws, and New Jersey and Florida would be more impaired if California law supplanted 5 those states' consumer protection laws. See id. at 7:1-12:1.

6 Plaintiff's only rejoinder is that a choice of law analysis is premature at this time. See 7 Opp. at 18-20. It is appropriate, however, to conduct the choice of law analysis prior to the class 8 certification stage where it is unlikely that discovery will uncover information relevant to whether 9 the plaintiff may maintain a national class action asserting claims under California law. See 10 Frenzel v. AliphCom, 76 F. Supp. 3d 999, 1008 (N.D. Cal. 2014). Plaintiff also cites Frenzel in 11 asserting that the choice of law analysis requires a more developed factual record than is 12 generally available on a motion to dismiss. See Opp. at 19; see also Frenzel, 76 F. Supp. 3d at 13 1007. In Frenzel, however, the court found that when the named plaintiff is a nonresident who 14 did not purchase the defendant's products in the state of California, there is further support for 15 applying the choice of law analysis at the pleading stage. See Frenzel, 76 F. Supp. 3d at 1007.
 16 Frenzel also references multiple California cases in which courts dismissed CLRA, UCL and 17 FAL claims asserted by named plaintiffs who did not purchase a defendant's products in 18 California. Id. at 1007, citing Frezza v. Google Inc., No. 12-cv-00237-RMW, 2013 WL
 19 1736788, at *5-6 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 22, 2013); Granfield v. NVIDIA Corp., No. 11-cv-05403-JW, 20 2012 WL 2847575, at *3 (N.D. Cal. July 11, 2012); Littlehale v. Hain Celestial Grp., Inc., No.
 21 11-cv-06342-PJH, 2012 WL 5458400, at *1-2 (N.D. Cal. July 2, 2012). Indeed, Plaintiff does 22 not explain what additional facts may be adduced through discovery that would affect the choice 23 of law analysis.

24 Moreover, Plaintiff does not substantively oppose Gap's application of the governmental 25 interest test. Plaintiff does not contest that there are (1) material differences among California, 26 New Jersey, and Florida laws; (2) that these difference give rise to actual conflicts among these 27 state laws; and (3) New Jersey and Florida would be more impaired than California if their 28 consumer protection laws are supplanted by California law. Cf. Opp. at 19:23-20:6, citing

1 Keilholtz v. Lennox Hearth Products, Inc., 268 F.R.D. 330 (N.D. Cal. 2010) (distinguishable 2 because the defendant failed to demonstrate material differences and conflicts among state laws).
 3 Gap has demonstrated that there are material and conflicting differences among California, New 4 Jersey, and Florida laws as to the requirements of scienter and reliance, the available remedies 5 (including what injury must have been suffered in order to allege a claim under the different 6 states' consumer protection laws), and the substantial differences among the "former price 7 statutes" for each state. See Mot. at 7-9.

8 The circumstances here are similar to those addressed in Cover v. Windsor Surry 9 Company, No. 14-CV-05262-WHO, 2016 WL 520991 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 10, 2016). In Cover, a 10 nonresident plaintiff attempted to bring a class action against a housing trim company 11 headquartered in California, alleging violations of California's consumer protection laws. Id. at 12 *1-3. In an effort to apply California law to its claims, the plaintiff argued that the "emanation 13 doctrine" governed choice of law analysis. Id. at 7. Specifically, the plaintiff asserted that 14 California had a compelling interest in applying its law because (1) the defendant's marketing 15 materials and warranty emanated from California, (2) the defendant was headquartered in 16 California, and (3) the defendant designed its products in California. Id. Because the plaintiff 17 was a resident of Rhode Island and the product marketing and product purchase occurred in 18 Rhode Island, the court found that identifying these transactions as the events that triggered 19 liability was consistent with the analysis in Mazza. Id. at *7-8. The court held that Rhode Island 20 law applied to the plaintiff's claims and dismissed the California consumer protection claims. Id.
 21 at *1. Additionally, the court found that discovery would not uncover information relevant to 22 whether the plaintiff may personally maintain claims under California law because the plaintiff's 23 residency and the location of the pertinent details regarding his claims were known. Id. at *5.

24 Like Cover, Plaintiff's complaint alleges the pertinent facts relating to his residency (New 25 Jersey) and the locations of his purchases (New Jersey and Florida). Also, like Cover, Plaintiff's 26 allegations that Gap's wrongdoing emanates from California is insufficient to plead that 27 California law applies to his claims. Moreover, Plaintiff does not contest the existence of 28 material differences among California, New Jersey, and Florida laws, that these laws are in

1 conflict, and that New Jersey and Florida would be more impaired if California law were to apply 2 to Plaintiff's claims. Because further development of the factual record is not reasonably likely to 3 impact the choice of law determination, this Court may decide the choice of law question at this 4 stage of the litigation. Plaintiff's individual and class CLRA claims should be dismissed.

5 III. PLAINTIFF FAILS TO PLEAD A CLAIM UNDER THE TCCWNA

6 As set forth in Gap's motion, the purpose of the TCCWNA is to protect consumers against 7 contracts, signs, and notices that include provisions that violate a "clearly established legal right" 8 of a consumer or responsibility of a seller. See Mot. at 12:16-25, citing Watkins v. DineEquity, 9 Inc., 591 F. App'x 132, 135 (3d Cir. 2014). The TCCWNA does not independently establish 10 consumer rights or seller responsibilities; instead, the rights and responsibilities to be enforced by 11 the TCCWNA are drawn from other legislation. See id. The New Jersey Supreme Court recently 12 cautioned against expanding TCCWNA in ways contrary to its legislative intent, explaining that 13 "even if a menu lacking beverage prices were to constitute a 'contract,' 'warranty,' 'notice' or 14 'sign' within the meaning of TCCWNA, it is far from clear that the statute was intended to apply 15 as plaintiffs contend that it should." Dugan v. TGI Friday's, Inc., 231 N.J. 24, 74 (2017) (in the 16 context of analyzing the lower courts' class certification decisions based on allegations that the 17 defendant violated the TCCWNA because it violated a "'clearly established legal right of a 18 consumer or responsibility of a seller' by offering beverages for sale, without notifying the 19 consumer of the total selling price at the point of purchase"). The New Jersey Supreme Court 20 also cautioned against applying the TCCWNA in a way that resulted in massive penalties for 21 common business practices. See id. at 74; see also Mot. at 14:15-21, citing authority describing 22 the traditional types of "clearly established legal rights" protected by the TCCWNA; see also 23 McGarvey v. Penske Auto Grp., Inc., 486 F. App'x 276, 280 n. 5 (3d Cir. 2012) (listing examples 24 of the types of clearly established legal rights that violate the TCCWNA, such as including a 25 provision stating that a seller is not responsible for any damages caused to a consumer, even when 26 such damages are the result of the seller's negligence, or that a lessor has the right to cancel the 27 consumer contract without cause and to repossess its rental equipment from the consumer's 28 premises without liability for trespass), citing Statement, Bill No. A1660, 1981 N.J. Laws,

Plaintiff raises three, unavailing arguments in opposition. First, Plaintiff argues that the TCCWNA covers situations where a defendant “displays any written notice, or sign” and that this case involves a sign in the form of a display stating a percentage discount, e.g., “40% OFF.” But, as the New Jersey Supreme Court recently observed, even if a sign is within the meaning of the TCCWNA, that may not automatically mean the TCCWNA applies to that sign. See Dugan, 231 N.J. at 74. Here, even if the percentage discount display is a sign under the TCCWNA, the TCCWNA does not apply to the type of information on the sign because that information is far from the types of traditionally, “clearly established right” that the legislature intended to protect under the statute. See Mot. at 15:17-21; see, supra, at 6-8.

Second, although a New Jersey Consumer Fraud Act (“NJCFA”) claim may serve as a predicate violation for a TCCWNA claim, that is not true in each case and notably not true in the present matter. To be clear, just because a plaintiff has pleaded an NJCFA claim, that plaintiff does not necessarily have a TCCWNA claim. As the New Jersey Supreme Court in Dugan recently cautioned, courts should be wary of improperly expanding the scope of TCCWNA to situations that the New Jersey legislature did not intend to cover with the statute. See Dugan, 231 N.J. 24, 74 (alleging claims under the NJCFA and the TCCWNA). Plaintiff’s reliance on the Munning decision, and the decision in Morcom v. LG Elecs. USA, Inc., No. 16-cv-4833, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 198935, at *42-43 (D.N.J. Nov. 30, 2017) (see Opp. at 10:1-5) is unavailing given that neither court analyzed the applicability of the TCCWNA to these types of situations.

Here, Plaintiff urges the application of TCCWNA in a context that deviates from the legislative intent to protect a “clearly established legal right.” Unlike the inclusion of a provision that violates a consumer’s established legal right, e.g., a provision stating that lessor has the right to cancel a contract without cause, here, the signage in question simply states a percentage discount, e.g., “40% OFF.” See, e.g., McGarvey, 486 F. App’x at 280 n. 5 (summarizing TCCWNA’s legislative history regarding several examples of the types of provisions that the legislature believed violated clearly established rights). It is unclear, and Plaintiff does not explain, how the signage itself violates a “clearly established legal right,” like those contemplated

1 by the legislature.

2 Moreover, Plaintiff does not meaningfully distinguish Cannon v. Ashburn, No. 16-1452
 3 (RMB/AMD), 2016 WL 7130913 (D.N.J. Dec. 7, 2016), which supports dismissing Plaintiff's 4 TCCWNA claim. See Opp. at 15:9-24. Plaintiff mischaracterizes that case as being based on the 5 "omi[ssion of] certain information from the label of wine purchased by consumers," and, thus, 6 inapplicable to the instant case. Id. Contrary to Plaintiff's mischaracterization, Cannon, like 7 Plaintiff's case, is predicated on the allegation that the defendants "advertise false original prices 8 and false discounts for wines sold on the WTSO.com website in order to induce consumers to 9 purchase certain wines" and that "Defendants misrepresented the existence, nature and amount of 10 price discounts to consumers on the WTSO.com website by purporting to offer specific 11 percentage discounts from expressly referenced but false former original prices for the wine 12 products at issue." Cannon, 2016 WL 7130913, at *1 (internal quotations omitted). Based on 13 these allegations, Cannon found that the "inclusion of an original price in the contract" does not 14 violate any clearly established legal rights. Id. at *11.

15 Third, Plaintiff argues that the display stating a percentage discount violated his "clearly 16 established rights under [] federal law;" namely, his rights under 16 C.F.R. § 233.1. Opp. at 17 11:18-27. 16 C.F.R. § 233.1 is an administrative interpretation provided by the Federal Trade 18 Commission ("FTC") regarding Guides Against Deceptive Pricing.¹ 16 C.F.R. § 233.1 cannot 19 serve as a basis for Plaintiff's TCCWNA claim because no private right of action exists under the 20 FTC and, thus, any purported violation of the FTC Guidelines cannot serve as a basis for 21 Plaintiff's TCCWNA claim. See Mladenov v. Wegmans Food Markets, Inc., 124 F. Supp. 3d 360, 22 380–81 (D.N.J. 2015) (dismissing TCCWNA claim brought for violation of the Food, Drug &

 24 ¹ Notably, the FTC Guides do not amount to enforceable law. Rather, the FTC's "[i]ndustry 25 guides are administrative interpretations of laws administered by the Commission for the 26 guidance of the public in conducting its affairs in conformity with legal requirements." 16 C.F.R.
 27 Part 17 (emphasis added). While industry guides may be "entitle[d] [] to respect," the "FTC 28 acknowledges that the Guides lack the force of law." FTC v. Garvey, 383 F.3d 891, 903 (9th Cir.
 2004) (in the context of FTC Guides governing environmental marketing). Further, any violation of provisions in Chapter 16 of the C.F.R. is actionable by the FTC and not by individuals. See Whitaker v. Tandy Corp., No. C-97-00803-VRW, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17085, *4 – 5 (N.D.
 Cal. Oct. 31, 1997); see also 16 C.F.R. § 2.2.

1 Cosmetic Act, which does not provide for private right of action); see also Castro v. Sovran Self 2 Storage, Inc., 114 F. Supp. 3d 204, 217–20 (D.N.J. 2015) (dismissing TCCWNA claim brought 3 for violation of the Insurance Producer Licensing Act, which does not provide for private right of 4 action); see also Doty v. Bayview Financial L.P., No. 08-4090 (JEI), 2009 WL 4757569, at *1 n.
 5 3 (D.N.J. Dec. 4, 2009) (applying same concept).

6 Plaintiff’s reliance on Posey v. NJR Clean Energy Ventures Corp., No. 14-6833 7 (FLW)(TJB), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 146688, at *26 (D.N.J. Oct. 29, 2015), is unavailing. The 8 defendant in Posey did not argue that a TCCWNA claim cannot be predicated on a federal 9 regulation that does not contain a private right of action – the argument raised by Gap here and 10 supported by ample authority. Thus, Posey did not reach a conclusion on the specific question 11 pertinent here. Further, Posey is distinguishable because the federal regulation at issue – the 12 Consumer Leasing Act and its implementing regulation, Regulation M – is promulgated under the 13 Truth in Lending Act, which does include a private right of action. See 15 U.S.C. § 1640. Thus, 14 Plaintiff cannot predicate his TCCWNA claim on 16 C.F.R. § 233.1.

15 Accordingly, Plaintiff’s individual and class TCCWNA claims should be dismissed.

16 IV. PLAINTIFF FAILS TO PLEAD A CLAIM UNDER THE FDUTPA

17 The FDUTPA only allows for the recovery of “actual damages,” which is measured by 18 “the difference in the market value of the product or service in the condition in which it was 19 delivered and its market value in the condition in which it should have been delivered” Mot.
 20 at 16:7-13, citing Rollins, Inc. v. Butland, 951 So. 2d 860, 869 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2006) (holding 21 that a plaintiff who experienced no actual loss does not have a claim for damages under 22 FDUTPA).

23 The crux of Plaintiff’s complaint is that Gap engages in false advertising because it 24 “create[s] the false impression that a consumer is getting a reduced, bargain price[,]” when, 25 according to Plaintiff, the consumer is not receiving a bargain because the “former price [] is 26 entirely fictitious.” Opp. at 1:4-6. Plaintiff alleges he paid $12.49 for “AIDEN CAMO” pants, 27 which he thought had a “market value” of $24.99. See Compl. at ¶ 191. Plaintiff claims that “the 28 pants were not worth $24.99 and their market value was no higher than the $12.49 for which Defendants routinely sold this item.” Id. Significantly, Plaintiff does not allege that the pants he purchased were worth less than what he paid. In other words, Plaintiff received pants that had a “market value” equal to what he paid. At most, Plaintiff is subjectively disappointed that he did not receive a bargain.

This is exactly the type of injury rejected under Florida law in Belcastro v. Burberry Ltd., No. 16-CV-1080 (VEC), 2017 WL 744596 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 23, 2017). See Mot. at 16:14-28. Tellingly, Plaintiff does not address Belcastro in his opposition. See Opp. At 16:3-18:2. In Belcastro, the plaintiff alleged that he was “deceived by the false price comparison into making a full retail purchase with no discount.” Id. at *1. The court rejected the plaintiff’s injury theory under the FDUTPA because Florida law does not “recognize any injury based solely on allegations that the plaintiff subjectively believed he was getting a better bargain that turned out to be true.” Id. at *3. Although the plaintiff may have “paid more than he was subjectively willing to pay” that “is not the same as factual allegations that Burberry uses deceptive reference prices to charge consumers a higher price for the same merchandise.” Id. at *5.

Likewise, here, Plaintiff does not allege that he paid a higher price for the pants he purchased due to Gap’s alleged practices. Plaintiff alleges in conclusory fashion that the market value was less than what Gap purportedly promised, but Plaintiff’s acknowledgment that the pants he purchased were worth what he paid is fatal to any claim of “actual damages” under Florida law. Plaintiff has, at most, established his subjective disappointment that the pants he purchased had a lower market value than he expected, but he has not suffered any “actual damages” cognizable under Florida law. Thus, Plaintiff’s individual and class FDUTPA claim should be dismissed.

V. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons and the reasons set forth in Gap’s motion, Gap requests this Court dismiss Plaintiff’s individual CLRA, TCCWNA, and FDUTPA claims; the nationwide class CLRA claim; the New Jersey sub-class TCCWNA claim; and the Florida sub-class FDUTPA claim.
